Black Eagles

The Black Eagles of Camp La Junta are a group of young men whose mission centers around service to the camp and who perform leadership roles through their exemplary conduct. As members of this honor organization, the Black Eagles can be depended on to assist the La Junta staff whenever called. To be tapped out as a Black Eagle is one of the highest honors that can be bestowed upon a camper at La Junta. Each summer the current Black Eagles and the staff carefully observe all Cowboy and Tophands. After much consideration, they select those boys who consistently strive to show perseverance, honesty, cooperation, courtesy, and good sportsmanship. The senior counselors vote to endorse all prospective members.

The purpose of the first year is to teach the new members about the Black Eagle organization and to lay a firm foundation of their RESPONSIBILITY. This will specifically take the form of teaching: RESPONSIBILITY for your actions, RESPONSIBILITY for possessions and RESPONSIBILITY toward others. These three are important foundation building blocks for success in life, camp and the Black Eagles.
